Having formerly worked in the field of education and in the CRPD monitoring body of the German national institute of Human Rights I am now, as a professor of Human Rights and Disability Studies, deeply interested in the social impact of the Human Rights movement of Persons with Disabilities and all other Civil Rights Movements (regarding all aspects of diversity) as well as in the implementation of Human Rights treaties.

With this combination of theoretical interests and practical experience my research focuses on questions of participation, accessibility and discrimination in present and historical perspectives.
